Waterless car wash

WATER restrictions have made the weekly car wash a thing of the past for all but the most avid car-lovers.

Even if you are willing to expend the energy involved in cleaning your car while sticking to the restrictions, the time involved is a sacrifice many are unable to make.

A new company, Ecowash, wants to tackle the shortage of water and time by providing a mobile car wash service that does not use a single drop.

It uses a polymer product that lifts dirt from the car's surface paint and captures it in a kind of lubricant, which is removed with a cloth. Then the remaining fine layer of polish is removed.

The company recommends the service be repeated every three or four weeks. A standard wash and polish of the body, wheels and windows, costs between $35 and $55 depending on the size of your car.
